

Marianna Epicoco - Short CV

I completed my master degree in Economics, Statistics and Social Sciences (110/110 cum laude) at Bocconi University in 2004.

In 2009 I obtained a multidisciplinary PhD (economic, legal and social sciences) in Labor Studies at the University of Milan, with a thesis titled “The political economy of technological change: exploring the role of institutions in the generation and diffusion pattern of semiconductor technologies” (Supervisors: Antonio Salvati and Giovanni Dosi).

In fall 2006, I have been visiting PhD student at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology – MIT. Between 2010 and 2013 I have worked as post-doc fellow at the GREThA institute (University of Bordeaux) and, later, at the BETA institute (University of Strasbourg).

Since 2013, I am associate professor (maître de conférences) in economics at the University of Lorraine (Polytech Nancy) and researcher at the BETA institute.
