

Marianna Epicoco - Short CV

In 2004, I received a Laurea (cum laude) in Economics, Statistics and Social Sciences from Bocconi University (Milan, IT) and in 2009 I obtained a multidisciplinary PhD (economics, law and social sciences) in Labor Studies from University of Milan, with a thesis titled “The political economy of technological change: exploring the role of institutions in the generation and diffusion pattern of semiconductor technologies” (Supervisors: Antonio Salvati and Giovanni Dosi).

In fall 2006, I have been visiting PhD student at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology – MIT (Cambridge, Massachusetts), while between 2010 and 2013 I have worked as post-doc fellow at GREThA (University of Bordeaux) and BETA institutes (University of Strasbourg). Since 2013, I am associate professor (maître de conférences) in economics at the University of Lorraine (Polytech Nancy) and researcher at the BETA institute.
